

Historic Roadhouses Statewide

Within the past two years we've lost two of our great historic roadhouses.

This loss and the heartfelt reaction amongst

Alaskans illustrates the significance of these iconic structures.

Coastal Archaeological Sites Statewide

Many Alaska coastal sites are being actively destroyed by erosion. This erosion is occurring as a result of sea level rise, storm events/surges and increased wave energy due to climate change. Erosion may result in the exposure of archaeological remains, resulting in deterioration/damage to the materials as well as increased chance of looting, over time and is in jeopardy of removal.
